

Chapter VI

Bibliography

- 1} Adam . & Harford N. (1998). Health on Air. London: Health Unlimited.

Health on Air is a practical guide to producing health program for radio. It uses a step-by-step approach to develop needs-based program, including planning , researching, designing, producing and evaluating. It is designed to support communicators and educators to make creative , audience-driven program that can inform and involve audiences in making positive choices about their health and well-being.

- 2} Elwes L. & Simnett I. (1996). Promoting Health. A Practicle Guide. (3rd ed.) London: Bailliere Tindall.

Promoting Health, A Practical Guide is primarily written for health promoters and deals with what, why, who and how of health promotion. The book starts with a description of the major influences on health, inequalities in health, and approaches to addressing the determinants of health. It not only explores the scope of health promotion but also analyses the aims and values associated with different approaches to health promotion.

3} Karmacharya D.M. (1997). Service Brings Reward. Kathmandu: National Health Education, Information and Communication Center (NHEICC) and (MOH) Ministry of Health , His Majesty,s Government of Nepal.

Service Brings Reward describes the design team/design document approach that was used to develop the Distance Education Program “Service Brings Reward” – A radio program and presents research findings on the effectiveness of the program and highlights the lessons learned about the value of distance learning.

4} Larssen S., Gram F., Haugsbakk I., Jansen H., Giri A., Shah R., Shreshtha M., & Shreshtha B. (1996). Urban Air Quality Management in Asia, Kathmandu Valley Report (Rep. No. 378). The World Bank.

Urban Air Quality Management in Asia, Kathmandu Valley Report presents assessment of ambient air quality of Kathmandu and also identifies sources of the particulate pollution and estimates impacts of particulate pollution. Further, report gives various abatement measures and their effectiveness and cost. The report also puts forward an action plan to improve air quality and air quality management system. Beside that, this report describes about existing laws and institution regarding to environment.

5} Lipfert L.W. (1994). Air pollution and community Health. New York: Van Nostrand Reinhold.

It deals with basic information of air pollution. The book describes methods of measurement and basis of pollution regulation in Canada, Japan, United Kingdom and United States. The book also deals with various studies, associated with air pollution, for example, time -series, cross sectional etc.

6} Ministry of Population and Environment. (1998). State of Environment, Nepal. Kathmandu: His Majesty's Government of Nepal.

The State of the Environment contains sector-wise information on environmental conditions, policy initiatives and emerging issues at the national level and it also includes some of the measures adopted for integrating environmental aspects into developing activities. The book is based upon the secondary level information.