

CHAPTER VI

ETHICAL CONSIDERATIONS

In every research the researcher must think about the ethical consideration of the subject. The subject must be given free to decide for participation in the research study.

6.1 Protection of the subject

In every research, the subject should be given free right to participate in the study. So it was responsibility of investigator to protect the subject in the study. There must be full understanding between the subjects and investigator.

6.2 Risk and benefit

According to nature of present study, there is no foreseen risk for subjects. The main objective of the study was only to identify work performance of AHW working in hill and terai health posts. To find out whether the CMA were working according to standard job description or not. Secondly, to know the deficiencies in the patient examination. Thirdly, to know the existing course curriculum of CMA whether the course contents were adequate or inadequate and relevant or irrelevant. This study would be more useful than harmful for the subject, community and the country.
